PART I
SUMERIAN RELIGIOUS TEXTS

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

The texts in this volume have been copied from tablets in the University Museum, Philadelphia, and edited in moments snatched from many other exacting duties. They present considerable variety. No. 1 is an incantation copied from a foundation cylinder of the time of the dynasty of Agade. It is the oldest known religious text from Babylonia, and perhaps the oldest in the world. No. 8 contains a new account of the creation of man and the development of agriculture and city life. No. 9 is an oracle of Ishbiurra, founder of the dynasty of Nisin, and throws an interesting light upon his career.

It need hardly be added that the first interpretation of any unilingual Sumerian text is necessarily, in the present state of our knowledge, largely tentative. Every one familiar with the language knows that every text presents many possibilities of translation and interpretation. The first interpreter cannot hope to have thought of all of these, or to have decided every delicate point in a way that will commend itself to all his colleagues.

The writer is indebted to Professor Albert T. Clay, to Professor Morris Jastrow, Jr., and to Dr. Stephen Langdon for many helpful criticisms and suggestions. Their wide knowledge of the religious texts of Babylonia, generously placed at the writer's service, has been most helpful. His thanks are also due to Dr. Edward Chiera for helpful criticisms of the text. He is also grateful to the authorities of the University Museum for the privilege of copying the tablets, and to Dr. George B. Gordon, the Director of the Museum, for many courtesies during the progress of the work. He is also deeply grateful to Mr. Harold Peirce whose aid has made this publication possible.

No. 1.

THE OLDEST RELIGIOUS TEXT FROM BABYLONIA.

This cylinder, found by Dr. Haynes at Nippur, remained unpacked in the basement of the Museum until after Professor Hilprecht's connection with the Museum had been severed. It was apparently broken when found, for parts of it were obtained from three different boxes. These were identified by the writer, and the text pieced together from eight different fragments. The Museum attendant afterwards fastened them together. Parts of nineteen columns of writing remain. Not more than one whole column of writing is lost.

The beginning of column i is unfortunately lost. The only proper names beside those of deities that can be identified in it are those of Nippur, Kesh, and Khallab (Aleppo). The interpretation of an inscription written in pure Sumerian would be in any case difficult. In the present instance interpretation is rendered doubly difficult by the loss of the opening sentences, which, perhaps, contained the name of the writer and certainly indicated the occasion of the composition. Under these circumstances it cannot be too strongly emphasized that the interpretation offered below is purely tentative. The conclusion that the writer has reached is, however, that the inscription was written as a foundation cylinder at a time when the temple at Nippur was repaired, and that this repair was probably undertaken because of a plague that had visited the city. Apparently the plague had made its way to Nippur from Kesh. While the occasion of the inscription appears, therefore, to have been historical, the inscription itself is of the nature of an incantation.

The script in which it is written is that of the dynasty of Agade.<sup>1</sup> It is slightly more archaic than the business documents of this period,<sup>2</sup> but similar differences are observable between the business scripts and those of religious texts in every period of Babylonian writing. As the dynasty of Agade ruled from about 2800 to 2600 B. C., the incantation here recorded is of equal if not greater antiquity than the Pyramid Texts of Egypt.

During the excavations a pavement of the temple terrace at Nippur laid by Naram-Sin and his successor Shargalisharri was found.<sup>3</sup> It is, in the absence of definite information as to where Dr. Haynes found this cylinder, plausible to conjecture that it was written at the time of this reconstruction. The probability that our text comes from one of the two great kings of Agade mentioned above is increased by the fact that the hold of the later rulers of the dynasty upon Nippur seems to have been uncertain, and there is no evidence that they did any building there.<sup>4</sup> We now know that these two monarchs belonged to the dynasty of Kish and Agade that ruled Babylonia for 197 years, and the data published in 1914 by Dr. Poebel<sup>5</sup> and in 1915 by Professor Clay<sup>6</sup> enable us to fix this period as from 2794 B. C. to 2597 B. C. Naram-Sin ruled for forty-four years (2704–2660 B. C.) and Shargalisharri twenty-four years (2660–2636 B. C.). The oldest of the pyramid texts of Egypt was written in the reign of Unis, a king of the fifth dynasty, whose reign, according to Breasted's chronology, was 2655–2625. It seems more probable that our text came from the reign of Naram-Sin than from the reign of Shargalisharri. The bricks of Naram-Sin were three times as numerous in the pavement of the temple court at Nippur as those of his successor. Naram-Sin<sup>1</sup> and Shargalisharri<sup>2</sup> each calls himself, "builder of the temple of Enlil," but it would seem probable that Naram-Sin constructed the terrace early in his reign of forty-four years and that Shargalisharri repaired it after it had had time to fall into disrepair fifty or more years later. If our somewhat uncertain chronologies are correct, Shargalisharri's reign was nearly contemporaneous with that of the Egyptian king Unis, while that of Naram-Sin antedated it. It is more probable that a foundation cylinder would be placed beneath the structure when it was first constructed than when spots in its worn pavement were repaired. It is, accordingly, a plausible conjecture that our cylinder was written early in the reign of Naram-Sin. In that case it is probably half a century older than the pyramid text of Unis and is the oldest extended religious expression that has survived from any portion of the human race.

This consideration gives to the text a supreme interest. It contains a primitive, but comparatively refined strain of religious thought. The men who wrote it entertained the animistic point of view. The world was full of spirits of which they were in terror, but chief among these spirits were gods, who, however capricious, were the givers of vegetation and life. They could be entreated, and man's hope lay in placating them. The text exhibits the neighborly admixture of religion and magic so characteristic of Babylonian thought.

When compared with the pyramid texts it presents one striking difference. They centre around the king and are interested in his fortunes as he enters among the gods. One text represents the Egyptian king as a cannibal, who in heaven eats gods to obtain their strength!<sup>1</sup> This Babylonian text, on the other hand, represents the community. If not the religious expression of a democracy, it comes at least from an aristocracy. The interests involved are those of the city of Nippur. It represents the point of view of a Babylonian city-state.

<sup>2</sup> This might, of course be rendered, "It came forth." Since the preceding context is lost, it is not certain what the subject of the verb is. From later portions of the text it is tempting to conjecture that it was some epidemic which spread from Kesh, as the pestilence is said to have spread from city to city in Philistia in 1 Sam. 5.

<sup>3</sup> The ideogram for Kesh is almost identical with the form of it in the Laws of Hammurabi, iii, 32, except that there it is followed by ki while here it is followed by liš, possibly to be read tu. At Nippur, the sign tu apparently had the value of ki, for in the "Sumerian Epic," published by Langdon, the name of the god Enki is several times spelled en-tu.

<sup>1</sup> The sign ama is the ideogram for "wild ox." It was also employed as an ideogram for emuqu, "strong," "deep," "wise," for bêlu, "lord," and for qarrâdu "warrior"; cf. OBW, 183. It was a favorite epithet of Enlil. A whole series of hymns at Nippur is known as the series ama-e bara-na-ra, "the wild ox of his sanctuary"; see Reisner, Hymns, p. 33, etc., and Langdon, Sumerian and Babylonian Psalms, p. 96 f. The "wild ox of the sanctuary" is in that title an epithet of Enlil. In line 5' we have the very expression ama bara, "wild ox of the sanctuary"; there can be little doubt, therefore, that the passage is an appeal to Enlil. For al=našâru, see OBW, 260<sup>3</sup>.

<sup>4</sup> The sign buru may be due to an accidental perforation of the tablet. If omitted, the sense would not be materially altered. It would be "O mighty abyss, give protection!"

<sup>5</sup> Possibly the reading is al-ku here, but, if so, the sense would be unaltered.

control of the gods, or at all events not in human control. It would seem probable that lines 7-10, from which so much is lost, contained Ninkharsag's response, ending with the command to look to the divine source of life,—probably to Enlil. Line 11 states that man lifted his eye to him; line 12 that that which came from Kesh (by hypothesis an epidemic), did not stand; lines 13, 14 tell how he (Enlil) delivered the lowly.

<sup>4</sup> An early expression of the idea that the very presence of a holy building drives away evil spirits and evil events and acts as a protection to a place.

<sup>5</sup> This sign (OBW, 521) has many meanings. It might be rendered "figure," "image," "vessel," "sceptre," "bed," "rest," "love," and "present." The last mentioned meaning seems to best suit the context.

<sup>1</sup> Cf. OBW, 427<sup>8</sup>. The translation given above is the only intelligible one the writer can make out of the two fragmentary lines. If more of the context were preserved, it might appear that the sense was something quite different. As it stands the passage seems to imply a knowledge on the part of the Babylonians of a story kindred to that of Genesis 3. However, in the absence of the context one cannot build on this.

<sup>2</sup> ab-lal has two meanings, aḫtu, "a nest" as of swallows, and naplaštu, "scales" or "balances" (cf. B. 3841, 3842). As "house" is mentioned in the preceding line, the word has been translated by the first of its meanings. If the second meaning were chosen, the passage would imply that the god possessed scales similar to those that are so often pictured in Egyptian inscriptions as belonging to Osiris.

<sup>5</sup> Gar means "a guard;" it can probably express the verbal form of the thought also.

<sup>6</sup> Lines 1-6 are not clear to me. They are capable of at least two interpretations. I have translated them as though they are an address of the "strong one who was told to guard life" (col. ix, 11, 12) concerning the demons of sickness. This is one possible interpretation; cf. JAOS, XXXVII, 27.

<sup>4</sup> The Sumerian reading of this name is given in CT, XII, 28, 28, though the last sign or signs are unfortunately there erased, leaving only za-ba legible. The ideogram occurs in REISNER'S Hymnen, 99, 67, and in slightly different writing in PSBA, XIII, 158, CT, XV, 19, 7, and the Code of Hammurapi, iii, 52. ZIMMERN, ZA, III, 97 and Tammuḡ, 133, HOMMEL, Grundriss der Geographie und Geschichte des alten Orients, 386, 390, and R. F. HARPER, Code of Hammurabi, 7, take it as an ideogram for Aleppo. While this is not absolutely certain, it is probable.

<sup>5</sup> šū, as a post-positive equals adi, ana, and ina. Ina in Akkadian sometimes is equivalent to "from." I take ki....šū in this phrase to be equivalent to ki....ta, "from," which occurs so often in the temple archives, e. g. HLC, 15, 43; 21, 11.

not occur. The spouse of Enlil is here called by two other names, Ninkharsag and Mush or Şir. That Ninkharsag was one of the names of the consort of Enlil has long been known, but the new light that the text throws on the Snake goddess Şir is important. That she was a goddess down to the time of Esarhaddon has long been known,<sup>1</sup> though Jastrow in his great work, Religion Babylonians und Assyriens<sup>2</sup> appears to have overlooked it. In an inscription of Esarhaddon published in BA, III,<sup>3</sup> Şir is defined as "bê-lit, "the divine lady," while in another copy of the text we find Şir "bel.<sup>4</sup> The scribes of Esarhaddon were therefore uncertain as to her sex,—a fact that indicates that she was actually in process of being transformed from a feminine to a masculine deity.<sup>5</sup> Zimmern<sup>6</sup> supposes that Şir was identical with the dragon-serpent Tiamat, but the references to her in our text disprove that view. She was regarded as a beneficent goddess, a friend to mankind. Although Şir appears in this text as a goddess, the serpent deity was also from early times sometimes regarded as a god.<sup>7</sup> According to our text Mush (Şir) was a spouse of Enlil. She was very wise. Her counsels strengthen the wise divinity of Anu (xi, 11, 12), a statement which reveals a point of view similar to that of Genesis 3<sup>1</sup>: "Now the serpent was more subtle than any beast of the field."<sup>8</sup> Snake worship is very old and has been widely scattered over the earth. It is not strange, therefore, that one of the roots of the cult at Nippur should have been the snake-goddess. One passage concerning her is very interesting. "From his cohabitation with Şir (Mush), he begat one strong as a large ibex, whom he told to guard life." (ix, 8-11). This statement embodies an idea very wide-spread among men, that important acts of creation are the result of cohabitation between a god and a goddess. This idea is expressed in lines 22-30 of a tablet which describes the origin of a city and the beginnings of agriculture, published by Langdon, and which he calls the Sumerian Epic of Paradise, the Flood, and the Fall of Man,<sup>1</sup> as well as in No. 4, line 22 ff., and in Nos. 4 and 8 of this volume; it appears in the Japanese myth that all things were generated by the union of Izanagi and Izanami,<sup>2</sup> in Indian myths, which represent the earlier Vedic cosmogonic ideas, and which refer to acts of creation as acts of generation.<sup>3</sup>

Another point of interest which the text makes prominent is the connection of Ninkharsag with enchantment. To her is attributed the function of enchanting the demons, or of keeping them away by incantations. If I rightly understand the text, a number of sentences are given, the utterance of which by her, was supposed to banish demons from the temple. A recollection that some such function attached to Ninkharsag is found in one of the Ritualtafeln<sup>4</sup> published by Zimmern, in which divination by oil, connected with the name of Enmeduranki is somehow also connected with the name of Ninkharsag. A line in the text is broken, so that it does not appear whether it is divination by oil, or Enmeduranki himself that is called "a creation of Ninkharsag," but the text attests a later belief in her connection with the subject. It appears that in the lapse of time her patronage was transferred from enchantment to divination. In this connection it is stated that a deity named Bada, who is otherwise unknown to me, opposed, or was hostile to Ninkharsag. From the point of view of suffering men, Bada, then, if not an actual devil, was one of the not-altogether-friendly divinities that had in him the potentialities of devilship. Perhaps this is too strong a statement of the case, for, in Babylonian thought, the gods were subject to all the passing moods of men, and Bada may have been thought to oppose Ninkharsag's beneficent restraint upon demons, not of settled purpose, but on account of some temporary dislike of men.

In column x, 13 mention is made of Urudu-e, or the Bronze god. In CT, XXIV, 49, 5b Urudu is defined as Ea. It is probable, therefore, that in our text Urudu is an epithet of Enki. The lists of gods in CT, XXIV further record a god Urudu-nagar-dingir-e-ne, literally "The bronze-carpenter of the gods" or "The metal-worker of the gods" (cf. CT, XXIV, 12, 25; 25, 87b), and Urudu-nagar-kalam-ma, "The metal-worker of the world" (CT. XXIV, 12, 24; 25, 87a).<sup>1</sup> The simple phrase, "the Bronze god," suggests a god represented by a bronze statue, but the name may have originated because the god of wisdom was believed to have imparted the knowledge of working metal. As Ea is the Semitic name usually applied to Enki, it is probable that in our text Urudu-e is Enki.

The passage that mentions Urudue says that he spoke with a deity called Da-uru. In CT. XXIV, 1, 13 Da-uru is given as one of the names of Anu. When it is said in our text that

Urudue spoke with Dauru, it is but another way of saying that Enki addressed Anu.

As among all early peoples the presence of the temple, the abode of deity, was thought to afford protection to the land (col. vii, 5 ff.). This idea persisted in Israel down to the time of Isaiah or later, (cf. Isa. xxxi, 4, 5).

In col. xii, 3, the name of a deity is expressed by nigin, the ideogram for double enclosure, or grand total. CT. XXIV, 18, 9b gives the Sumerian name of this deity as Ishkhara-nigginakku, and the Semitic as the goddess Ishtar.

This goddess who is said by her ideogram to sum up the totality of deity, is said to be the possessor of <sup>815</sup>pi-pi, i. e. the pi-pi-tree or pi-pi-plant. This plant is mentioned in K 71b, iii, 21,—a tablet published by KÜCHLER,<sup>1</sup> where the writing is <sup>8am</sup>pi-pi. It was a plant believed to have medicinal properties, since in the tablet published by KÜCHLER it is an ingredient of a medical prescription.

Another interesting statement is found in col. xv, 8 ff., where the phrase mês-lam-ta-ê, or as formerly read šid-lam-ta-e, follows the name of Ninurta or Nin-ib. This phrase is in later texts connected with the name of Nergal, and later still, with the planet Mars.<sup>2</sup> The phrase means, "the hero who comes forth from lam," or "the prince who comes forth from lam." The only known meanings of lam are "sprout," "to bear fruit," and ninšabu, perhaps, "be blown away" from the stem našabu, "to blow,"—a meaning applicable to the falling petals of a flower, or to the pollen of a fruit-bearing plant. The sign lam itself probably originated in the picture of a ploughshare, thus suggesting growth and fruitfulness. When this phrase describes

Ninurta as "the hero who comes forth from lam," what does it mean? May the meaning not be suggested by two seals published by Ward on which a god is represented as a walking tree?<sup>1</sup> In each case a human form takes the place of the tree-trunk, the head is surmounted by the horns that are emblematical of deity, and from the body the branches of a tree grow. Probably we see in these figures the picture of the "hero who came forth from vegetation" (lam). It is this hero who comes forth day and night from vegetation, as our text says, who protects the increase of the cattle. This deity is declared to be Ninurta or Ninib, rather than Nergal. It thus becomes probable that the deity referred to under the name Mês-lam-ta-ê in the time of Dungi,<sup>2</sup> of the dynasty of Ur, was Ninib rather than Nergal.

In conclusion it should be noted how closely sickness is associated in the text with the work of demons. In col. x, 18, according to one interpretation,<sup>3</sup> a demon is adjured not to fly to the darkness of the city, the light of the city, or the people of the city. The Babylonian view that sickness was demoniacal possession was so all-pervading that its primitive character does not need demonstration. The evidence of this text on the point is, accordingly, what we might expect.

7. Strong are the houses;
8. the dwelling is of aromatic wood,
9. the great dwelling
10. of Enlil."

The text here presented is enigmatical and difficult, and it must be confessed that its interpretation is uncertain. That offered here is merely tentative. If I rightly understand it, it is an oracle obtained from the inspection of a victim by a seer for Allu-<sup>d</sup>Kal, who wished to rebuild the temple, or some buildings that formed a part of the temple at Nippur. The building was to be constructed of cedar. I take it that the destructive axe which Enlil is to receive from Enki is the axe with which the cedars are to be cut. Enki, the god of wisdom, was supposed to be the inventor of working wood as well as the discoverer of working bronze. This axe and its work, it is declared Enlil will guard. The priest then adjures the gods, addressing Enzu in particular, requesting that the dwellings of cedar may stand, and he declares that in reply Enzu assured him that Alla-<sup>d</sup>Kal dwells where he (Enzu) dwells, that he (Alla-<sup>d</sup>Kal) is exalted as one of the bearded princes, that the foundation shall be firmly laid, the dwellings constructed of cedar, and the great dwelling of Enlil of aromatic wood.

The sign which I have rendered victim(?), , is an unidentified sign. It is, apparently, an older form of , a sign which Langdon in AJSL, XXXIII, 48 ff. reads šúb and equates with shepherd. His evidence for this is that in a syllabary of the time of Lugal-ušum-gal published by Schileicho in ZA, XXIX, 79 gal- occurs next to gal-šab, which Langdon translates "great shepherd" and reads šub. It has the value šab according to all the syllabaries, and means "great priest" or "great baru-priest." Langdon's inference that because the two words follow each other in the syllabary they are therefore synonyms is likewise fallacious. Moreover the Sumerian word for shepherd is not šub but sib or siba. In Clay's Miscellaneous Inscriptions of the Yale Babylonian Collection, No. 12, there is published a larger duplicate copy of the syllabary ascribed to Lugal-ušum-gal in the ZA text. A study of this makes it clear that the larger part of the syllabary is occupied with a list of Sumerian words before which gal, "great" could be written. Thus in col. i we have gal-kal, "large laboring-man;" gal-muš, "large serpent;" gal-dim, "large dim-grain;" gal-sangu, "high priest;" gal-sangu-e, "large priest-house;" gal-ti, "long life;" gal-ša-šag, "large palm grove;" gal-muš pa, "large fearful(?) serpent;" gal-tuk(?), "long hair;" gal-keššeba, "great image;" gal-muš + muš + šir, "great shinbiltu-tree;" gal-ša-bi, "great terra cotta sceptre;" gal-ša-urudu, "great bronze sceptre;" gal-e, "great house." Col. ii is mostly occupied with a list of garments, but in line 11 we find gal-numun, "abundant seed;" in l. 13

gal-sil, "large prayer-offering." Line 14 has the heading nun-mê, "princes" or "great men." Naturally therefore l. 15 begins gal-sangu, "high priest"—a term which here occurs for a second time. The end of the second column and the beginning of the third are defaced. When col. iii becomes legible we read: gal-li, "great unguentary (of a temple court);" gal-kisal, "great temple court;" gal-šab, "great barû-priest;" gid-šab, tall barû-priest; then gal-, the phrase in question, which is followed by gal-tur, "a great court-yard" or a "great fold." It is clear from this list of words that because one word follows another they are not necessarily synonyms. The context of the expression gal- in the Nippur inscription suggests that some meaning like victim would be appropriate, and it would not in the syllabary be inappropriate for a victim to be followed by the fold from which the victim was taken. I accordingly tentatively translate "a large victim."

If I am right in taking the Al-la-<sup>d</sup>Kal as a proper name it is proof that al-la, though sometimes the name of a deity preceded by the determinative dingir,<sup>1</sup> is not, when not so preceded, always a deity as Huber supposes.<sup>2</sup> It is a predicate element here. The name means, "the god Kal protects."

Muš in col. i, 5 is spelled with the sign for serpent (OBW, 328). Here it apparently represents a phonetic spelling of Muš "appear, appearance" (OBW, 115).

In col. iv, 2 the phrase aš-nun-me-sù, "one of the bearded princes," is interesting. Nun has the meanings "great," "prince," "strong," "lord," and preceded by the determinative for divinity may denote Anu, Ea, Bel, or Sin. The Sumerian deities are pictured on the seals as bearded, although the Sumerians themselves were beardless. Eduard Meyer has shown that this is because the Semites were the first settlers in Mesopotamia, and that, after the invasion of the country by the Sumerians, the Sumerians adopted the local traditions of various Semitic deities and pictured their gods as bearded. Since this is the case, may not the phrase be a hint to Alla-<sup>d</sup>Kal that he may be deified as were Naram-Sin, Gudea, Dungi, Bur-Sin, Gimil-Sin and others?

No. 3.

HYMN TO DUNGI.

The colophon to this tablet states that it is the first of a series addressed to "My King," and the contents make it clear that the king was Dungi. The tablet was originally considerably larger than at present and contained six columns of writing. Columns i and ii have suffered at the ends by breaking; columns v and vi, at the beginning; while columns iii and iv have been almost destroyed.

Similar hymns to Dungi have been published by Langdon in BE, XXXI, Nos. 4 and 5 and in PBS, X, No. 7 (translation, p. 136 f.). Such compositions appear to have been introduced into Babylonian worship in the time of the dynasty of Ur, and were continued into later dynasties. Thus two hymns to Ishmi-Dagan of the dynasty of Nisin are published by Langdon, BPS, X, Nos. 9 and 14. A text to Ibi-Sin of the dynasty of Ur is also published below.

This custom seems to have been introduced with Dungi. Was it begun during his life-time, or only after his death? Mercer has contended (JAOS, XXXVI, 360-380) that no Babylonian king was worshipped during his lifetime, but that all such worship developed after their death. He overlooked, however, the fact that his contention is nullified by proper names that were given during Dungi's reign. On one tablet (HLC, II, pl. 53, No. 10) the following names occur: <sup>d</sup>dun-gi-ra-kalam-ma, "The land is for the god Dungi;" <sup>d</sup>dun-gi-kalam-ma-gi-li-bi, "The god Dungi,—the land is his delight;"

<sup>d</sup>dun-gi-à-uš, "The god Dungi is the strength of man;" ka-<sup>d</sup>dun-gi-ib-ta-ê, "The word of the god Dungi goes forth;" ama-<sup>d</sup>dun-gi-ra-<sup>d</sup>ur-ru, "The mother of the god Dungi is the goddess Urru;" <sup>d</sup>dun-gi-u-nam-ti, "The god Dungi is the food of life." On another tablet, HLC, I, 12, No. 52, 9, occurs the name tab-<sup>d</sup>dun-ki-<sup>d</sup>nannar, "The god Dungi is the twin of the god Nannar." This tablet is also dated during Dungi's reign. If such praise could be given him by means of proper names during his lifetime, there can be little doubt but that laudatory hymns such as this were composed in his honor while he was yet alive. The script of our tablet shows that this copy was made during the time of the First Dynasty of Babylon, but that does not preclude an earlier date for the composition of the original.

<sup>3</sup> The pictograph from which the sign dun is derived was apparently that of a pig (see OBW, 427). The female of the species was sacred to the goddess Bau and the sign could designate that deity. Langdon regards the dun-animal as the zebu or bos indicus, but there is no evidence known to me in favor of such an identification.

A MYTH OF ENLIL AND NINLIL.

This tablet, though fragmentary, as the copies show, contains a more complete text of a myth, a portion of which was published by Pinches in 1911 in PSBA, XXXIII, 85 ff. The text of Dr. Pinches contained an Akkadian translation; the Philadelphia text is in Sumerian only. The myth concerns the irrigation of Nippur and the establishment of its prosperity. The first line of Dr. Pinches text read "At Duranki, their city they dwelt" instead of "At . . . . . their Nippur(?) they dwelt." A colophon at the end of his tablet states that it was "First tablet, At Duranki, their city. Not finished." In reality his text covers only parts of columns i and ii of our tablet. The two texts in general agree closely, though there are minor variations here and there.

The myth itself is of great interest. It represents the courtship and marriage of Enlil and Ninlil. He was a young hero; she a handmaid. She was standing on the bank of a canal, when he saw her, ran to her, and kissed her. Her heart was captivated; she yielded to him, and from their marital union fertilizing rain was born. The story is not unlike that of the union between Enki and Nintu in the Epic of Paradise published by Langdon.<sup>1</sup> The idea of creation by birth from the marital union of deities appears to have been particularly popular at Nippur. The creation of men occurred in this way according to the myth published below as No. 8.

After the creation of irrigating waters and the settling of some marital differences between the god and goddess, they proceeded to Nippur accompanied by fifty great gods and seven gods of fate; they cast out the poisonous plants and gave intelligence to the inhabitants. For these and other blessings our text ascribes praise to Enlil and Ninlil.

TRANSLITERATION AND TRANSLATION.

7. tul-lál <sup>5</sup> tul-a-dug-ga-bi na-nam	7. The good well, the well of sweet water is theirs;
8. id nun-bi-ir-rá ḡud-mul-bi na- nam	8. The canal Nunbiirra, its star- bright one, is theirs;
9. ib-ta-bu-i-ne buru-gan-šeg-ga gar- bi na-nam	9. They reap a bur of irrigated land; its food is theirs;
10. <sup>d</sup> en-lil guruš-tur-bi na-nam	10. Enlil, its young hero, is theirs;

<sup>1</sup> Possibly Dur-šag should be read as a proper name. It has been translated to give the English reader the meaning.

<sup>1</sup> For this goddess cf. CT, XXIV, 9, 34; 23, 16b. Perhaps we should read Ninbarshegula. In these passages the spelling is slightly different, but the goddess is doubtless the same. She was evidently a grain goddess.

<sup>5</sup> The sign ka may also be read du (OBW, 15<sup>6</sup>). I have taken it as the genitive particle, but it may be the final syllable of the name.

FRAGMENT OF AN INCANTATION RITUAL.

This text, though fragmentary, is of great interest. The tablet contained four columns, but columns i and ii are entirely erased. Indeed few lines of columns iii and iv have been preserved entire, nevertheless, if the following translation, which on account of the condition of the text is necessarily tentative, at all represents the original, the text affords an interesting example of the ritual by which it was believed destructive storms could be averted. Such storms were frequent in Babylonia: cf. Reisner Sumerische Hymnen, No. 7 and Peters, Nippur I, 258, 259.

A PRAYER FOR THE CITY OF UR.

It is most regrettable that this interesting composition is in such a fragmentary state. From the portions that can be translated it appears to be a prayer for the city of Ur at a time of great danger and distress. It seems impossible to assign it with certainty to any particular period. The hymn to Dungi (No. 3) and that to Ebi-Sin (No. 7) show that during the period of the dynasty of Ur great homage was paid the sovereigns of that city at the temple at Nippur. It is tempting to conjecture that this long composition was written during the last days of Ebi-Sin, when Ur was tottering to its fall. The conjecture is plausible, but cannot at present be confirmed.

A HYMN TO IBI-SIN.

This fragment of a hymn to Ibi-Sin is a portion of a large, finely written six-column tablet. Unfortunately it is so broken that in only a portion of columns ii and v are there complete lines. These portions are herewith translated. In line 5' of col. v he is addressed as lugal-mu, "My king." It is probable that the hymn belonged to the same series as No. 3 the hymn to Dungi. Ibi-Sin was an inglorious king. Under his rule the extended empire built up by Dungi gradually dwindled and was finally overthrown, but the tradition that he was a god, inherited, perhaps, from the great Dungi, persisted, and loyal courtiers and priests in the language translated below addressed him as the source of all blessings, and with servile adulation lauded him as a god. The hymn must, one is compelled to think, have been composed during his lifetime, for there was nothing in his career that could, so far as we know, induce later generations, in a city like Nippur, to address him in such language. He was the last of his dynasty, and fawning priests and courtiers were soon compelled to make their peace with a conqueror to whom his memory was hateful (see No. 9 below). The hymn supplies a powerful argument for emperor worship in Ur during the lifetime of the monarch.

<sup>1</sup> Cf. OBW, 450. The ideographic value is unknown, but as the sign consists of the emblem for fire within an enclosure "furnace" or "brazier" does not seem a violent guess.

<sup>2</sup> This sign consists of the sign for "man" within which is placed the sign for "fire" or "heat." It is unknown to me elsewhere, but from its elements the meaning "comfort" does not seem a rash conjecture.

A NEW CREATION MYTH.

This important text was found by the writer among some then uncatalogued tablets that had just been unpacked. It belongs to the cycle of myths of which No. 4 above is an excellent example. It is also in some respects parallel to the myth published by Langdon in PBS, Vol. X, No. 1, called by him a "Sumerian Epic of Paradise," etc. Takku (read by Langdon Tagtug) is one of the deities who figures in this new myth. Like the myth published by Langdon, this one begins with an elaborate statement of the non-existence of many things once upon a time. Most interesting is its statement that mankind was brought forth from the physical union of a god and goddess.

<sup>1</sup> In the script of this period the sign may be either tu (OBW, 337) or erim (OBW, 347). The latter suits the context here.

<sup>2</sup> a-ba may be the interrogative pronoun "who?", the adverb "afterward" or mala, "over against," "in comparison with," then, "as many as there are." Possibly we should read a-tu = "wise ones."

| 9. anše-ra<sup>11</sup> bir-a-bi nu-ub-tu-ud                              | 9. Horses <sup>11</sup> (?) and cattle had not been created,   |

<sup>3</sup> As written on the clay and blurred this sign is illegible. Some lines have to be supplied in imagination. The phonetic complement ga shows that some syllable ending in g stood here. I at first read dug but was never fully satisfied with it. sig (OBW, 308) is possible and fits the context better.

<sup>4</sup> The sign e is blurred on the tablet and the reading is not absolutely certain, but is the most probable. kalam-e-bi might be "his land," possibly meaning "his Sumer." The instances below, however, where bi is the postpositive conjunction, together with the nature of the things in the immediate context that are said to be still non-existent, make it probable that kalam-e-bi mean "land and water." A possible reading would be uku-e-bi = "His people" (Takku had not created).

<sup>5</sup> The sign tak as it occurs here is distinguishable from tik (for which I at first took it) only with the greatest difficulty. The god here referred to is, however, clearly the being that LANGDON calls Tagtug. For a discussion of his character and functions see the writer's article "New Babylonian Material Concerning Creation and Paradise" in the American Journal of Theology, XXI, 586 ff., 595 ff. . . . .

<sup>6</sup> The reading gù is conjectural. The sign was partly erased by the scribe; 'u is also uncertain, being partly chipped away.

<sup>11</sup> The ra of this line is blurred; it looks more like ra, but may possibly be e. If we read e the reading is "asses;" if ra we must suppose that the reference is to "horses" and that kur has been accidentally omitted. The appearance of the sign on the clay and the mention of the ass in line 7 incline me to the reading ra. The line might also be rendered: "Horses(?) (or asses) had not brought forth their young."

<sup>1</sup> This sign and the following long puzzled me. They are so written on the clay as to appear to be one sign, and were so taken in my preliminary rendering. It now seems better to transliterate as above taking them for OBW, 295 and 325.

<sup>2</sup> The last sign looks on the clay clearly like apin (OBW, 55); it may however, be a badly formed ge (OBW, 269). The last makes better sense.

<sup>3</sup> With an added ki we should have here the Anunaki, or spirits of earth. The ki is however wanting, so that the expression seems to be a symbol for dingir gal-gal which follows.

<sup>4</sup> The grain še-še occurs in ZIMMERN'S Ritualtafeln, 42, 26, where he renders it "Bitterkorn." Cf. also CT, XXIII, 1, 2.

<sup>6</sup> Cf. OBW, 478<sup>a</sup>. We might read iſib (OBW, 478<sup>a</sup>) and render "The priest of their god."

Ishi-urra, the founder of the dynasty of Nisin, lived about 2340 B. C. He is here, as elsewhere, described as a "man of Mair," a city in northern Babylonia. He was not a native of Nisin. Similarly Lugalzaggisi, though king of Erech, was not a native of that city, but of Umma. The oracle apparently encouraged Ishbi-urra to attack Ur. In order to encourage Ishbi-urra in the enterprise, victories that Enlil, presumably through former kings, has achieved over Amurru and Elam, are cited. The text appears to have been composed at a later time, and states that, in consequence of the oracle Ishbi-urra's throne was firmly established.

"The lord of Ur, the hostile man" of line 2 is evidently Ibi-Sin, king of Ur, whom this text says that Ishbi-urra subdued. This confirms the statement on the chronological tablet published by Hilprecht (BE, XX), "Ur, its dominion (?) was overthrown; Nisin took the kingdom." A rival theory had been that Ibi-Sin, the last king of Ur, was taken captive to Elam. Sayce, PSBA, XXXIV, 166, so states without giving any authority. Langdon, BE, XXXI, 5, repeats the statement on the basis of a text at Constantinople, which he there translates. The line on which he bases this theory is, however, broken. It has lost its verb. Langdon supplied "was taken," making it read "Ibi-Sin to the land of Elam (was taken)" (op. cit. p. 7). On this authority the statement is repeated by Clay, Miscellaneous Inscriptions of the Yale Babylonian Collection, 42. Our text shows that all this is erroneous. The broken line in BE, XXXI, 7, (i. e. No. 3, rev. 5), must have contained a different verb.

AN EXCERPT FROM AN EXORCISM.

After this fragmentary text was in type, it was discovered that it is an excerpt from a longer text (CBM, 14152) which has been copied by Dr. H. F. Lutz. Dr. Lutz has kindly permitted me to see his copy and interpretation of the text. The part of the text copied by me forms lines 5-24 of the reverse of Dr. Lutz's tablet. Some of the lines on my tablet are fragmentary, and can be completed from his. I would render the portion published here as follows:

FRAGMENT OF THE SO-CALLED "LITURGY TO NINTUD."

This text contains a fragment of the text that Dr. Langdon has named the "Liturgy to Nintud on the Creation of Man and Woman,"—a designation which the writer is inclined to believe will have to be abandoned, when the whole text is known. A fragmentary form of the text is preserved on a prism in the Ashmolean Museum, Oxford. It was published by Langdon in his Babylonian Liturgies, Paris, 1913, plates LXV-LXVIII, and translated on pages 86 ff. Three other fragments of the same text have also previously been published: one by Radau as No. 8 of his "Miscellaneous Texts" in the Hilprecht Anniversary Volume (1909), and translated by Langdon on p. 19 of his Sumerian Epic of Paradise, the Flood, and the Fall of Man, (1915); another by Langdon in BE, XXXI, (1914), pl. 22; and a third by Langdon in his Sumerian Liturgical Texts, 1917, pl. LXI. Of these three, the first and third are in the University Museum in Philadelphia, the second in the Imperial Ottoman Museum at Constantinople. Unfortunately, even with the addition of the new material here presented, it is impossible to reconstruct the whole text of the work. The Ashmolean prism has suffered greatly from disintegration, and the other texts so far recovered are mere fragments. The text of this composition was divided into sections. At the end of each section there was a colophon giving the number of the section. The Ashmolean prism contained eight such sections. The new tablet which is published herewith was the second of three tablets on which the text was written in nine sections,—three on each tablet. Our tablet contained sections four, five, and six. Section five corresponds to section four of the Ashmolean text and the text of BE. XXXI; section six, to section five of those texts. Section four, accordingly (the first section of our tablet), is a section previously unknown. The text of sections five and six of our tablet is much broken, but as these sections overlap sections in BE, XXXI and the Ashmolean prism, the lines of which are also fragmentary, the three sources supplement one another in a very satisfactory way, and make it possible to restore several incomplete lines.

The nature and purpose of the composition are still obscure. Langdon (Babylonian Liturgies, 86) says: "The occasion which gave rise to the composition appears to have been the coronation of a patesi king of Kesh." The evidence for this view is far from convincing. Kesh is mentioned in some broken lines, where it is impossible to make out the meaning, but so is Surippak. Several sections later a patesiat is also mentioned in a broken line. Apparently the text celebrated the primitive (or very early) conditions in some town; possibly the founding and growth of the town, but beyond this we can confidently affirm nothing. We must await the recovery of the whole text.

So far as the writer can see, there is no allusion in the text to the creation of man. True, allusion is several times made to the goddess Nintu, the mother of mankind (see above, No. 8). The sign lû which Langdon renders "man" the present writer renders "which"; cf. OBW, 289.<sup>9</sup> Langdon renders "Like Enkkar may man bear a form"; the present writer: "Like Enkkar verily was the form which it bore." As Enkhar was a place, it seems clear that the comparison refers to a place and not to a man. Men do not resemble places! The reading giš = "man" in Babylonian Liturgies, LXVII, 22 (the line is numbered 19 in his translation on p. 91!) is confessedly uncertain. It is partially erased and the other copy which contains the line omits it. If giš really stood in the text, it could with greater probability be rendered "tree" rather than "man." In the writer's judgment, therefore, the nature of the text is still an enigma.
